
THE AUTHORS OF THE VOLUME

The editor

István György Tóth, PhD in sociology, is director of TÁRKI Social Research Institute and affiliated professor at Budapest Corvinus University. He has been co-editor of the Hungarian Social Report series since 1998. He has led a number of research projects on European comparative social structures, income distribution, social policy and demand for redistribution, and he has published on these topics in various widely quoted handbooks, research reports and journal articles.

The authors

Anikó Bernát is a sociologist, researcher at TÁRKI Social Research Institute and a PhD student at the Doctoral School of Sociology of ELTE University, Budapest. Her research interests are civil society, volunteering, minorities, disadvantaged groups, Roma people, migration, culture, and social and political attitudes.

Zsolt Boda is the research chair and director of the Institute of Political Science, at the Centre for Social Sciences of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, as well as affiliated professor at ELTE University and the Corvinus University of Budapest. He holds an MA in economics and a PhD in political science. His research interest focuses on governance and policy studies. He has published and led a number of research projects on institutional trust, agenda setting and policy making. Currently he is the principal investigator and coordinator of an H2020 RIA project: DEMOS – Democratic efficacy and the varieties of populism in Europe.

Réka Branyiczki is a researcher at TÁRKI Social Research Institute and a student at the Doctoral School of Political Science at Central European University (CEU). She holds an MA in economic policy (CEU), a BA in international business (Corvinus University of Budapest) and a BA in psychology (ELTE University).

Benő Csapó is a professor of education at the University of Szeged and head of the Doctoral School of Education, the Research Group on the Development of Competencies, Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and the Centre for Research on Learning and Instruction. He was a Humboldt research fellow at the University of Bremen (1989) and at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences, Stanford, California (1994–95). His fields of research include cognitive development, educational evaluation and technology-based assessment.

József Balázs Fejes PhD in educational science, is an assistant professor in the Department of Social and Affective Education, University of Szeged. His fields of research cover learning motivation and education of students with low socio-economic status. He is the co-founder of a Hungarian NGO, Motivation Educational Association.

András Gábos PhD in sociology, is a senior researcher at TÁRKI Social Research Institute. His research interests lie in poverty, child poverty, child well-being, social policy, family policy and fertility.

György Gajduscek is head of the Department for the Study of the Private, Criminal and Administrative Law Guarantees of Market Economy at the Centre for Social Sciences of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences and a professor at the Corvinus University in Budapest. His research fields are public administration and policy and legal culture in post-communist countries.

István Harcsa is a sociologist and social statistician. His research interests include social indicators, lifestyle and living conditions, social stratification, family structure and family cohesion.

Ágnes Hárs is an economist and senior researcher at the KOPINT-TÁRKI Economic Research Institute. Her main research interests are the labour market, labour economics, labour migration, economics of migration and measuring migration.

József Hegedűs is an economist and sociologist, a founding member and managing director of the Metropolitan Research Institute and an associate professor at Corvinus University. His main research interests are housing policy, housing regimes in the post-socialist states and municipal management.

András Jakab is currently professor of constitutional and administrative law at the University of Salzburg. He is also an honorary fellow of the Pázmány Péter Catholic University Budapest. Formerly he held various research and teaching positions in Budapest, Madrid, Liverpool, Nottingham and Heidelberg. His research areas are constitutional law, European law, legal theory, comparative law.

László Kinyó, PhD in educational science, is an assistant professor at the Institute of Education, University of Szeged. He holds courses on the teacher training programmes and at the Doctoral School of Education of the University of Szeged. His fields of research include civic competence, educational evaluation and information-communication technologies in education.

Zsófia Kollányi, PhD in sociology, is an assistant professor in the Department of Health Policy and Health Economics, Faculty of Social Sciences, ELTE. Her main areas of interest are health inequalities, social cohesion and psychosocial determinants of health, and economic consequences of ill health.

Tamás Kolosi, social scientist, is the founder and president of the TÁRKI Social Research Institute, and professor emeritus at ELTE University. The president of the Hungarian Republic awarded him the Széchenyi Prize in 2001. His research interests are social stratification, the regime transformation and methodologies.

Péter Krekó, PhD in psychology, is the executive director of Political Capital, associate professor in the Faculty of Education and Psychology of ELTE University, lecturer in subjects on social psychology and political psychology. During 2016–17, he worked as a Fulbright visiting professor in the United States at the Central Eurasian Studies Department of Indiana University. He focuses on Russian ‘soft power’ policies and political populism and extremism in Europe. He wrote his PhD thesis on the social psychology of conspiracy theories.

Márton Medgyesi PhD in sociology, is a senior researcher at TÁRKI Social Research Institute. He regularly lectures on social inequality at the Corvinus University, Budapest. His main research interests are income distribution, intergenerational transfers in the family and the welfare state and attitudes (e.g. inequality tolerance, trust).

Judit Monostori is a sociologist, senior research fellow at the Hungarian Demographic Research Institute. Her research interests are social inequalities, family formations, lone-parent families, ageing, pension schemes and retirement.

Éva Orosz, PhD in economics, DSc in sociology, is a professor and head of doctoral programme in social policy, Faculty of Social Sciences, ELTE University. She worked in the OECD Health Division in Paris between 2002 and 2010. Her main research fields are: comparative studies of healthcare systems, inequalities in health and health care, health expenditure and financing, Hungarian healthcare reforms. She has provided consultancy services several times for the OECD, WHO and World Bank since the early 1990s.

Krisztián Pósch is a postdoctoral research fellow in the Department of Methodology at the London School of Economics (LSE). He earned his PhD in research methods and statistics at the LSE in 2018. He has an MSc in research methods and statistics (LSE) and an MA and BA in psychology (ELTE University, Hungary). He worked at the TÁRKI Social Research Institute as a research assistant in 2013–14.

Péter Róbert graduated in sociology from ELTE University, received his PhD from the Hungarian Academy of Sciences and has made his habilitation at ELTE University. He has been working for TÁRKI Social Research Institute as a senior researcher since 1986. He is also a full-time professor at Széchenyi University, Győr. His research interests involve social stratification, educational inequalities, school-to-work transition, the perception of social inequalities and subjective well-being.

Bori Simonovits is a sociologist, senior researcher at TÁRKI Social Research Institute and a lecturer in the Faculty of Education and Psychology of ELTE University. Her research interests are discrimination, migration, labour market and sharing economy.

Eszter Somogyi is an economist and sociologist, researcher at the Metropolitan Research Institute. Her main research interests are social housing policies, social and territorial disparities, and social integration of marginalized groups.

Zsolt Spéder, sociologist and demographer. He has been director of the Hungarian Demographic Research Institute since 1999 and professor of sociology at the University of Pécs since 2011; he was president of the European Association of Population Studies (2016–18). His research interests are family formation and fertility, attitudes and values towards the family, social inequalities and poverty, international comparisons, longitudinal studies. He regularly publishes in international and Hungarian journals, including the Demographic Research, Social Forces, European Journal of Population, Population, Population Research and Policy Review, and Demográfia.

Blanka Szeidl is a researcher at TÁRKI Social Research Institute. She has a Master's degree in survey statistics and is currently a PhD student in applied mathematics at the Bolyai Institute of the University of Szeged. Her main research interests are social research methodologies and migration

Iván Szelényi is William Graham Sumner emeritus professor of sociology and political science, Yale University; was Max Weber professor of social sciences and foundation dean of social sciences at NYU Abu Dhabi. He is a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and an ordinary member of the Hungarian National Academy of Sciences. His main research interest is the comparative analysis of post-communist capitalist countries.

Péter Szivós is an economist and statistician, managing director and senior researcher of TÁRKI Social Research Institute. His research interests are income distribution, income inequalities, social exclusion and the empirical analysis of poverty.

Nóra Teller is a sociologist, researcher at the Metropolitan Research Institute and PhD candidate at the Corvinus University, Budapest. Her research interests are social exclusion, housing policy, homelessness and the segregation of Roma people in Hungary and Eastern Europe.

Gábor Tóka is a professor in the Department of Political Science at the Central European University. His research interests are voting behaviour, preference aggregation through elections, and the analysis of democratic institutions.

Edit Tóth, PhD in educational science, is a research fellow at the MTA-SZTE Research Group on the Development of Competencies. She is an associated research fellow at the Centre for Research on Learning and Instruction and the Social Competence Research Group, and a supervisor of PhD students at the Doctoral School of Education. Her research interests focus on accountability in education, on the development of financial literacy in primary school, and on the effect of school and family as background factors in students' achievements.